Summary

The National Citizen Survey™ (The NCS™) is a collaborative effort between National Research Center, Inc. (NRC) and the International City/County Management Association (ICMA). The survey and its administration are standardized to assure high quality research methods and directly comparable results across The NCS communities. The NCS captures residents’ opinions within the three pillars of a community (Community Characteristics, Governance and Participation) across eight central facets of community (Safety, Mobility, Natural Environment, Built Environment, Economy, Recreation and Wellness, Education and Enrichment and Community Engagement). This report summarizes Santa Fe’s performance in the eight facets of community livability with the “General” rating as a summary of results from the overarching questions not shown within any of the eight facets. The “Overall” represents the community pillar in its entirety (the eight facets and general).

By summarizing resident ratings across the eight facets and three pillars of a livable community, a picture of Santa Fe’s community livability emerges. Below, the color of each community facet summarizes how residents rated each of the pillars that support it – Community Characteristics, Governance and Participation. When most ratings were higher than the benchmark, the color is the darkest shade; when most ratings were lower than the benchmark, the color is the lightest shade. A mix of ratings (higher and lower than the benchmark) results in a color between the extremes.

Across the pillars of Community Characteristics and Participation, resident ratings tended to be favorable and similar to those given in other communities across the nation. The facet of Built Environment within Community Characteristics received ratings lower than the benchmark, while rates of Participation within the facet of Community Engagement tended to be higher than those observed elsewhere. Ratings for many facets within the pillar of Governance tended to be lower than the national benchmark; however, evaluations of Natural Environment, Recreation and Wellness, and Education and Enrichment were similar to those seen in other communities. This information can be helpful in identifying the areas that merit more attention.
